THE GUARDIAN.

By Major-General Charles Miller, A. M.

At the foot of the Juniata mountains in Pennsylvania where the river, like a silver band, suddenly breaks away from its usual placidity and dashes picturesquely over rocks, a beautiful valley opens before the beholder's gaze. It is such a scene as one loves to dwell upon; and were it transplanted to some other country, where love of nature has been instilled and fostered, it would become celebrated in song and story.

If the traveler will turn his eyes from this enchanting view he will see, on the other side of the great iron highway, a most picturesque flag station, fronted by a carefully-kept terraced lawn in all its freshness of green. Lilies, morning glories, and many varieties of wild flowers, native to this mountain region, grow about in luxuriant profusion, forming a picture upon which one looks with wonder and admiration. On the second terrace from the top of the elevation on which stands the little building, there can be seen indented in the earth a seat large enough to accommodate two persons; and about where the feet would rest is a little mound smothered with sweet forget-me-nots. The thought suggests itself that it is a grave, and so it proves to be. Beneath the dew-kissed flowers, fanned into fragrance by the zephyrs of the mountain, rests all that was once dear to one human heart. Near to the mound, on pleasant days, sits an old man bent with the weight of years; his face betokens intelligence and culture, but his eyes show even to the casual observer that the soul within is that of a dreamer—that of a man whose thoughts are soaring over the mountain tops, far away into the ethereal blue. His hair is as white as the mantle of snow with which for nearly half the year the mountain slopes are gracefully draped. He seems above the menial duties of keeper of such a little station, but he performs them uncomplainingly, soothed, perhaps, by the music of the brook, which courses down the mountain side and ripples over the rocks, singing a continuous song of contentment to one whose ear is attuned to nature's symphonies. Even the willows on the banks seem to sway in unison with the all-pervading harmony. Thus, in this embowered, isolated spot lives the old man alone, dreaming out a life which in its span contains a story never before written, except in the consciousness of himself and the few to whose sympathy chance has disclosed the devotion of his deep and steadfast soul.

In the centre of the vista, down the valley, stands an old house, which, though almost hidden by foliage, still reveals the comfort and enjoyment of its once hospitable walls and presents certain architectural features which, if not in accord with prevailing standards, make, nevertheless, a somewhat imposing appearance, and bespeak the individuality and forcefulness of its builder. Round about is a lawn, neglected, but of magnificent proportions, lined with white birches—veritable monarchs of their kind—which, in the dim light of eventide, suggest the spirit-forms of its old-time occupants.

Many years ago there resided in this now forsaken house a family rich for the days in which they lived, enjoying many luxuries in their home and bearing a name known and respected both far and near. The only child, a son of marked ability, had graduated at Harvard and in accordance with his tastes was fitting himself for the profession of a civil engineer. In the days of Salem's commercial glory his grandfather had sailed from her harbor on many a profitable voyage. Was there evidenced in the grandson in his choice of a profession, the grandsire's love of battling with the forces of nature? Was there, too, perchance, in embryo in his character a certain vague, mystical trait, a heritage from the days, when his mariner ancestor had felt the subtle and powerful influence of trackless wastes and of unfathomable depths?

Before the close of the first half of the last century, indomitable pluck, backed by capital, was cutting its way through the mountains of Pennsylvania, fashioning a great iron artery of commerce. In this vast undertaking, men of intelligence and activity were needed, and the young engineer sought and readily obtained employment as an assistant. He was assigned to the division near his home. Being fond of out-door life, his work appealed to him. In it he found attractions not comprehensible to more prosaic minds, and in his leisure hours he derived the keenest enjoyment from roaming the mountain slopes. In the contemplation of nature he discovered beauties unperceived before, listened to sermons preached by the flowers, and read new chapters in the running brooks.

One Sunday evening, while returning from a long jaunt over peaks and through glens, he chanced to meet, near where the railroad station now stands, a slender young woman whose intelligent, finely-chiseled face, trim figure, and becoming costume, were heightened by the fresh, bright-colored flowers she had just gathered. She seemed to him like a queen from the days of chivalry. Between minds they have kindred tastes and sympathies, it is not difficult to become acquainted when chance brings them into each other's presence. Thereafter these two often rambled through the woods together. In time he learned that she had come to this healthful region to fortify herself to resist inherited tendencies which it was feared might sometime develop and claim her for their victim, as they had certain other members of her family. The remaining days of her sojourn sped quickly by. When the early frosts were tinting with brilliant hues the foliage on the mountain sides, she took her departure to her home in the East, but not before she had become the affianced bride of one she had learned to look upon with respect, admiration and love. When, a few weeks later, he visited her home, the daughter's choice was cordially approved by her parents. He impressed them as one to whom they could unreservedly entrust the hapiness of their idolized daughter.

Upon his return to his duties he felt inspired as never before, yes, prouder and happier than he had ever supposed it possible for a mortal to be. Never was there a day when, at some hour of the twenty-four, he did not snatch the time required to write her a message of love and devotion. The letters which he received from her, had for him an indescribable charm; the dainty paper, the light, delicate, but regular and individual style of her handwriting; the words, which left so much unsaid, but still gave glimpses of a personality endowed with rare graces of mind, as well as of heart; the expressions which spoke by inference, at least, of her high sense of pride in him, of her wealth of affection for him and of her unreserved confidence in the genuineness and sincerity of his every utterance—all these combined to make her letters to him seem like communications from an ideal being on some other planet, where flourish only the virtues of humanity, without any of its attendant flaws and vices.

One day in the early spring, in place of the daily letter, a brief telegram was received from her home, summoning him to come at once. Suddenly, all the air about him seemed to be filled with gloom. When he arrived he found his worst fears realized. The inmates of her home were grief-stricken, and could speak only in broken sentences. She was still conscious, but the medical attendants said she had only a few hours yet to live.

He was ushered into her room where she lay propped up by pillows; a smile of grateful recognition illumined her countenance. "I knew I should see you once more," she said. "We must part now, but some day we shall meet, never again to be separated. Bury me up there at the foot of the mountains where we first met. Cover my grave with flowers such as we used to gather. I shall not feel lonely there near you." She was silent. A little later they whispered: "She is dead."

So, where the mountains lift their stately heads away into the azure blue, above the beautiful Juniata, the young man, now old, keeps his daily vigil among the plots of flowers till he shall receive the welcome summons to be re-united to the loving heart from which he has been so long and painfully separated.

NAVAL FORCE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

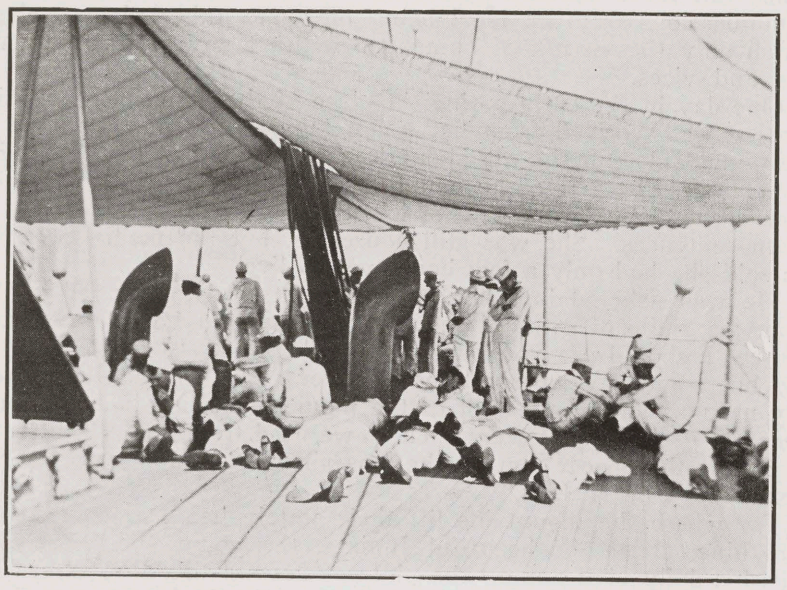
By Lieutenant (Junior Grade) Louis E. Fagan, N. F. P.

The work of the Naval Force of this State during the past year has been of a very interesting nature, and the results obtained have been of great satisfaction to all hands. The high ratings at the spring inspection, and subsequently on the practice cruise, were the results of earnest work on the part of the men of the organization, and more than repaid them for their interest. At the spring inspection the general average of Division A was 98.11, while that of Division B was 96.22. This was for infantry, artillery and guard duty, and did not include seamanship signalling, great gun practice, etc., in which branches the Naval Force receives its most important training. Divisions C and D, stationed at Erie, Pa., on the U. S. S. Wolverine, were but recently mustered into service, hence the Adjutant General determined not to inspect them for the year 1912.

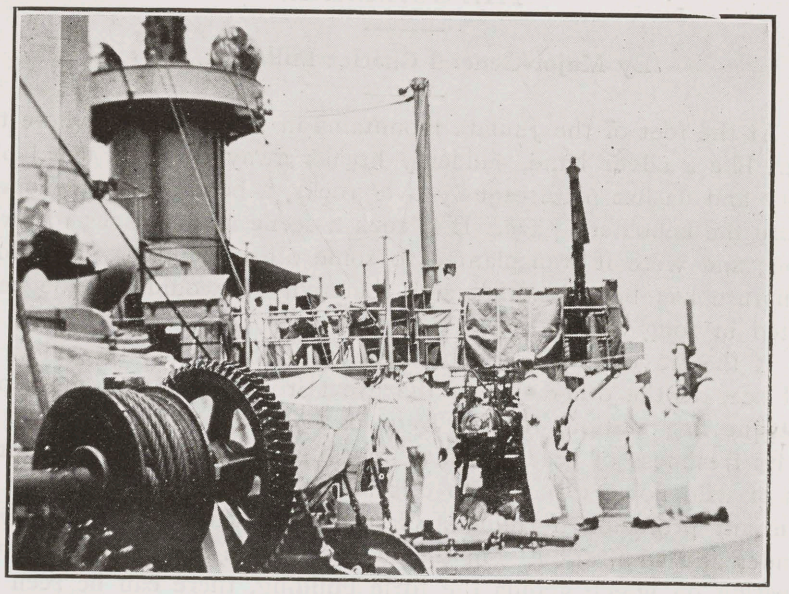
In the spring, sailboats and steamers were put overboard and in these the men practiced, taking trips on Saturdays and Sundays. This system combined instruction and recreation, and is highly interesting. The men thus become proficient in handling small boats, which furthers their knowledge of seamanship.

In the middle of the summer the battalion embarked on the annual practice course. The Philadelphia divisions boarded the U. S. S. Iowa, a battleship of the first-class, and cruised along the Atlantic coast as far north as Newport, Rhode Island, remaining in that port over the Fourth of July. Anchor was then weighed and the ship headed south for Chesapeake Bay, where, in Tangier Sound, preparations were made for target practice with the broadside guns. The Maryland Naval Brigade was also quartered on the Iowa, so that there was an excellent opportunity for competition, and the interest in the practice was very keen. The range consisted of an equilateral triangle with sides 1600 yards long. The vessel steamed, at a speed of ten knots, along one side of the triangle, the target being moored at the opposite angle on a line parallel to the ship's course. The ship's course was marked by three buoys of such a nature as to be visible one mile; one buoy at each of the two angles of the triangle and one midway between and in line with them. The target screens were 21 feet long and 20 feet wide. They were floated on rafts and made of white canvas, divided into 16 equal rectangles, by three vertical and three horizontal black lines 2 inches wide, and had a black bull's-eye 3 feet square. Firing at the target commenced as soon as the first of the three buoys was reached, and ended when the last of the three buoys was passed.

A moment's reflection will make it clear that the range gradually became less than 1600 yards as the first buoy was left, reaching its minimum at the middle buoy, and again increasing as the third buoy was neared. This, together with the movement of the ship, gave excellent practice in sight-setting and made the conditions much like those that would exist while firing upon an enemy. In this target practice both the Maryland and Pennsylvania organizations did very well, the marksmanship of the latter being slightly superior, while comparative scores show that Pennsylvania did over twice as well as New York, whose organization fired the same guns on the same ship at a later date. In fact, from information received so far, the Naval Force of Pennsylvania did better at target practice than any other State on the Atlantic coast. A great deal of this is due to the intense interest that the men took in their work. The gun crews never had to be urged to exercise—their officers always found them only too willing to do so.



A MOMENT'S REST AFTER MESS.



GUN CREW PRACTICING WITH FOUR-INCH RIFLE, U. S. S. IOWA.

The Erie divisions cruised on the U. S. S. Wolverine, the ship assigned them by the Navy Department, and, commanded by Commander Joseph M. Mitcheson, N. F. P., steamed on the Great Lakes, falling in with the other Lake Naval Forces at a designated rendezvous. Target practice and boat work were conducted in addition to the regular ship drills, (such as collision drill, abandon ship, fire drill, general quarters, etc.), and the results obtained were very satisfactory.

Thrice during the year the officers of the battalion have been at liberty to board one of the battleships of the Atlantic fleet for additional target practice, and those who could arrange their business affairs did so. These practices were, of course, of great interest, as the turret guns were brought into action, and the fleet manoeuvered as a unit and assimulated as nearly as possible the actual battle conditions, clearing ship for action before engaging the targets, and at times actually firing at real ships anchored as targets.

One of the most interesting incidents of the year was the trip to New York City for the Atlantic Fleet Review, held in October. For this occasion the battalion boarded the battleship Kentucky and the scout cruiser Chester—the Philadelphia divisions being assigned to the former, while the Erie divisions manned the latter, meeting her in New York after having been transported from Erie by rail. The review received such prominence that it is hardly necessary to go into detail concerning it. More than one hundred and twenty men-o'-war participated, and were assigned berths in North River, extending for a number of miles along its banks. On Saturday, October 12, a parade was held, in which 6,000 officers and men participated. The route was from Ninety-sixth street, down Broadway to Fifty-ninth street, thence to Fifth avenue, and down to Twenty-seventh street. President Taft reviewed the column at Forty-second street. A tremendous smoker was held for the enlisted men that night at the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory, at which most of the leading vaudeville stars in New York gave performances, while at the Astor the officers were entertained in the same manner. On the following Monday a dinner was given by the Mayor in honor of the President, his cabinet, and the officers of the fleet. Many of the most prominent citizens of New York were present, who did their utmost to express their genuine feeling of hospitality to the members of the Navy. The whole week was a succession of delightful experiences for all hands, and left a vivid impression of the cordial interest that the citizens of the great Metropolis took in its guests.

On the morning of Monday, October 13, the Secretary of the Navy, Hon. George von L. Meyer, aboard the U. S. S. Dolphin, inspected the fleet. In the afternoon President Taft passed between the lines on his yacht, the U. S. S. Mayflower, amid the booming of guns. The next morning, at a signal from the commander-in-chief of the fleet, Rear Admiral Hugo Osterhaus, U. S. N., the ships got under way and headed for the open sea. At the Narrows the Mayflower lay at anchor, and from her bridge the President reviewed the column. As each ship bore abeam, she fired the national salute of 21 guns. Each vessel had previously received orders regarding her destination, and the fleet was no sooner clear of Ambrose Channel than groups dropped out of formation and stood for various ports.

At present the battalion is hard at work in infantry, artillery, seamanship and signals. Most of the time is being devoted to the first two subjects in preparation for the spring inspection by Colonel Sweeney. A special course of instruction is being given to each of the groups of petty officers, for—unlike the infantry, artillery or cavalry—each division, or company, contains a number of representatives of each branch of the naval service. There are masters-at-arms, boatswain's mates, gunner's mates, quartermasters, machinist's mates, electricians, carpenter's mates, etc. For each of these groups text books are provided by the Navy Department, and lessons are assigned for study.

The commissioned officers also have studies assigned them, each divisional officer supervising the work of the junior officers in his division. A number of the officers of the Naval Force are ex-naval officers, whose familiarity with the service has been of great value to the battalion, while all those who receive commissions and have not been educated at Annapolis, are thoroughly examined as to their professional qualifications. The examination for commission includes arithmetic, algebra, geometry, plane and spherical irigonometry, mechanics, history, geography, grammar and rhetoric, physics and chemistry, astronomy, navigation, seamanship, ordnance and gunnery, steam and electric engineering, marine engineering, and naval construction.

MILITIA NOTES.

The latest bulletin of the Division of Militia Affairs, War Department, issued by Brigadier General A. L. Mills, General Staff, gives the following information:

ROWLEY'S FAMOUS NINTH INFANTRY BAND.

The Inspector-Instructor of South Dakota, First Lieutenant Calvin P. Titus, U. S. Infantry, in a report dated October 26, 1912, has made some interesting and excellent recommendations on the best manner of employing the service of sergeant-instructors on duty in the State, and they are herein published for the benefit of all concerned:

1. In studying over the problem "In what manner can the sergeant-instructor, in his ten-day visit at each company, be used to the best advantage?" the following conclusions are arrived at:

2. Having had the pleasure of serving with the South Dakota Guard at Sparta this past summer and having assisted in its inspection and in numerous drills, I came to the conclusion that what it lacked most was definite and careful SQUAD training.

3. The squad is the unit about which most of the rest of a fighting army must revolve. This for the reasons that: In the squad the individual is taught how to obey orders; how to march; how to put up his camp; how to handle his arms; how to fire them; how to clean them; how to take care of them so that when the time of necessity comes they will be ready for use; how to act as a patrol, as a guard of any kind; how to advance on an enemy; how to take cover and how not to take it, and how to take care of his physical body while in the field. What is platoon, company, or battalion drill but the movement of a small or large number of squads together? If the non-commissioned officers and men of a company do not understand squad drill thoroughly, how can you expect them to execute most of the movements in company drill? The most of the company drill is taken up in having a number of squads execute their drill at the same time, having certain distance and interval relations with each other.

4. If these things are true and if the ten days that the sergeant-instructor has with each company, he can in any way bring these conditions into being, he will have fulfilled his duty.

5. Now the amount of time that a guard company cany spend in drill in ten days is not sufficient to enable one man to train all of the squads in these many things. This being the case, the following plan is proposed in order that the greatest good can be accomplished in the given time:

6. The sergeants and corporals (except the first sergeant and quartermaster general) will be formed into a squad and placed under the direct control of the sergeant-instructor. If it is expected that some of these non-commissioned officers will soon be leaving the company, it would be well to replace them in the squad by the privates who will most likely take their places. The company officers and the first sergeant and quartermaster sergeant will be on hand and closely follow all of the drill so that they may get hold of the methods and know exactly what to require of their squad leaders.

7. Sixty per cent. of the time at each drill will be devoted to training the squad in the school of the soldier, manual of arms, squad drill in close and extended order, guard duty, bayonet exercise, and setting up exercise.

8. Twenty-five per cent. of the drill time will be devoted to training the squad in: Sight reading—the use of the half sight, all of the sighting exercises (special attention being given to the position in rapid fire kneeling, from a standing start, rifle at the ready-rapid fire prone from a standing start with rifle at the position order arms, loaded and locked. In these rapid fire movements the sling must be used (loop over left arm), use of the battle sight and where to aim with it at the 200, 300 and 500 yard ranges when firing on the rapid fire target). (The new course that is to be adopted is all rapid or timed fire for record. Kneeling at 200 yards, prone at 300 and 500, prone with sand bag rest at 600. Everyone shoots the same course and are graded according to the per cent. made).

9. Fifteen per cent. of the drill time will be devoted to: The manipulation, care, and cleaning of the different parts of the rifle; special attention will be devoted to the care and cleaning of the bore; training in the use of the cleaning material furnished by the government. If the rifles of the company need it, one entire drill period may be given to the practical work of cleaning the bores of all the rifles in the company. (The holders of the rifles, of course, doing the work).

10. It is the desire of the inspector that when he inspects this winter he will find every rifle in the very best possible shooting condition. In order that this condition may be brought about, and that all rifles may be kept in the best condition, it is requested that at each drill during the year, the first ten minutes, or as much time as is necessary, AFTER THE ASSEMBLY, be given to cleaning the rifles and that at the end of the drill, before recall, time be given to oil the rifles THOROUGHLY. If this method is followed, and the squad leaders oversee their squads while it is being done, I believe that the rifles will all be kept in excellent condition.

126. The large number of small arms, particularly revolvers, lost by the Organized Militia, follows in a large measure from the failure to properly secure this class of property from theft. The following paragraphs from Ordnance Property Regulations are cited for the information of those charged with the care of small arms:

> 52. * * * When small arms are not in the possession of enlisted men for the performance of military duty, they are required to be locked in the arm racks or the arm lockers. The arm racks are intended for the safe-keeping of the small arms in daily use by the organizations to which they have been issued, and the arm lockers for such arms as are not required to be issued frequently to enlisted men.
> 54. * * * When, for any reason, troops in the field are not permitted to be armed at all times, responsible officers will have the pistols and revolvers safeguarded under conditions that will provide for their safe-keeping.
> 67. The Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia are required to have arm racks and arm lockers on hand for the safe-keeping of the small arms issued to them and to see that every possible precaution is taken for their safe-keeping.
> 68. The several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia are required to provide suitable armories for the safe-keeping of ordnance property of the United States issued to them.
> Troops of the Organized Militia, unless they are serving in the field, are required to store the ordnance property issued to them in the armories provided for the purpose.

A board of officers, convened to consider the question of a proper machine gun organization and equipment, has recommended that certain alterations be made in the automatic machine rifle, calibre .30 (Benet-Mercier), with which the Regular Army and Organized Militia are to be supplied. For that reason the equipment of these units will now be delayed for approximately six months, while such guns as have been issued will be recalled for the necessary alterations.

The Chief of the Quartermaster Corps has reported the fact that the failure of the authorities of several of the States to forward promptly signed receipts for property issued for the use of the Organized Militia has resulted in delaying reimbursement of the appropriations of the Quartermaster Corps. This matter is an important one and receipts covering property issued should be signed and returned without delay. There are no specific appropriations available for procuring supplies for issue or sale exclusively to the Organized Militia. Such supplies are obtained by purchase, using the Regular Army appropriations for the purpose, and these appropriations are generally too inadequate to enable a large stock to be kept on hand. When an issue is made to the Organized Militia, the receipts must first be received in the issuing department; the department concerned is then reimbursed from militia appropriations for the cost of the property; the department must then generally advertise for bids; contracts are then let, and only after the supplies contracted for are delivered, is the issuing department again in its former position to fill requisitions. A consideration of these facts shows that delay on the part of any particular State in returning signed receipts works a continuing hardship not only on the State concerned, but on the Organized Militia of other States and upon the Regular Army.

The conditions for the award of the National Defense Trophies, set forth in paragraph 33, Bulletin of Militia Notes, November 1, 1911, requiring a report from the Adjutants General of the several States to the Chief, Division of Militia Affairs, who selects the organizations to be given the trophies, ARE REVOKED. Due to a great increase in work and to an inadequate clerical force, the Division of Militia Affairs will be unable to handle any correspondence relating to these trophies, which should hereafter be addressed to the Manager, Rifle Smokeless Division, I. E. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Company, Wilmington, Delaware.

Query has been made concerning the status of the proposed Guard Manual, and upon investigation it was found that, while the subject of adopting a new Guard Manual has not been dropped, the War Department is unable to say at this time just when it will be issued.

The Adjutant General of one of the States has reported that the securing of affidavits to accompany survey proceedings of property rendered unserviceable, or lost or destroyed, entails considerable expense which must be borne from the National Guard funds of the State when such affidavits are taken before notaries public. This statement of the Adjutant General is followed by a request that the War Department authorize the United States disbursing officer in the State to administer oaths in such cases. The matter having been referred to the Judge Advocate General of the Army, his decision is as follows:

> United States disbursing officers are not authorized to administer oaths in such cases, and the War Department is not empowered to so authorize them. Congressional authority will be required.

Signal Office Circular, No. 8, War Department, current series, contains the following information:

For the guidance of all concerned, when submitting requisitions, the following information is supplied:

The type "H" wire cart, when furnished complete, is supplied with the following extra parts:

One wheel (except in the case of Signal Corps field companies of the Regular Army, which are supplied only with the number authorized by existing orders).

One paulin.

One canvas roll containing the following tools: 1 can, oil, steel, pint; 1 chisel, cold, 6-inch; 1 crank, reel-cart; 1 hammer, carpenter; 1 screw-driver, 8-inch; 1 wrench, monkey, 8-inch; 1 plier, 8-inch; 1 set, wrench, S, to fit special bolts on carts; 1 wrench, alligator, 8-inch; 2 pads, hand, leather.

The 1911 service buzzer when furnished complete consists of: One buzzer with equipment of dry batteries, tool, connecting cord with connectors (clamps) and plug, receiver, transmitter, and ground rod.

The 1912 field artillery telephone when furnished complete consists of: One telephone with battery, receiver, tool, and connecting cord with plugs attached.

The following is a copy of recent instructions sent to the Commanding Generals of the Eastern and Western Divisions:

Division commanders will cause annual inspections and tests to be made of the entire Signal Corps equipment installed in the armories of the Coast Artillery of the Organized Militia in their respective divisions. Such inspections and tests will take place, if practicable, during the six months preceding June 30 of each year, and will be made by the district artillery engineers of the Artillery District to which the militia organizations are permanently assigned. Officers designated to make these inspections and tests will give notice thereof to the Adjutant General of the State. The inspector should be accompanied during his inspection by the artillery engineer of the Organized Militia and by the officer immediately responsible for the equipment to be inspected.

A report covering the inspection and test, on blank forms provided with the Signal Corps in accordance with the provisions of General Orders, No. 146, War Department, 1911, will be prepared in triplicate and forwarded to the division commander. One copy will be withdrawn for file in the office of the chief signal officer of the division, and the remaining two copies will be forwarded to the Adjutant General of the Army for file in the offices of the Chief Signal officer of the Army, and the Chief, Division of Militia Affairs, respectively.

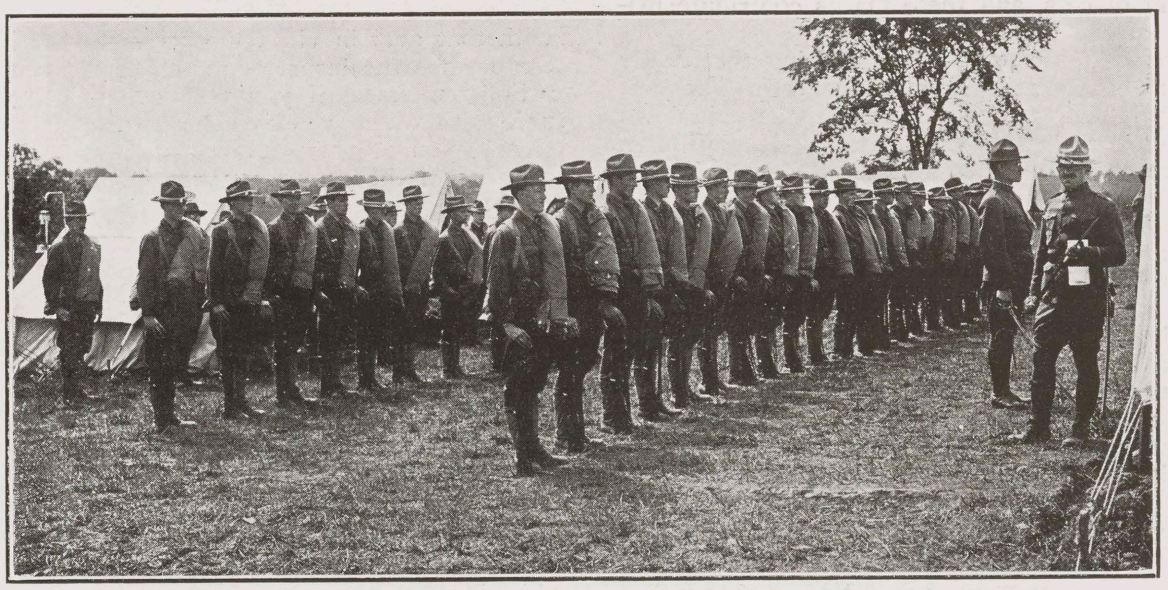
Examination of the reports of the Federal inspections reveals the fact that but few organizations are equipped with the identification tag. In the event of active service, this tag is an important part of the soldier's uniform, and in view of this fact, a proper supply should be in the hands of the Organized Militia at all times.

The tag is described in paragraph 243, Militia Regulations, 1910, but in the revised edition of the regulations to be issued as soon as practicable, this paragraph will be altered to read as follows:

An aluminum identification tag, the approximate size of a silver half dollar and of suitable thickness, stamped with the name, rank, company, regiment, or corps of the wearer, will be worn by each officer and enlisted man of the Organized Militia when on active duty in the service of the United States, the tag to be suspended from the neck, underneath the clothing, by a cord passed through a small hole in the tag. It is prescribed as part of the uniform. The tags as issued to the States will be in blank, and should be stored in bulk at regimental headquarters until the troops are called into active service, at which time they should be properly inscribed and issued. A marking outfit to be used in stamping the inscription is issued by the Ordnance Department and should be in the possession of each regiment or separate unit.

The tags cost approximately $1 a hundred, and are obtained from the Quartermaster Corps on approved requisition. The marking outfit costs approximately $5.25 and is obtained in like manner from the Ordnance Department. It should be noted on requisition as "Marking outfit for stamping metal, model 1910."

The State of Maryland has adopted the same system of administration, correspondence, reports, returns, and regimental and company records, as is used in the Regular Army.



COMPANY M, THIRD INFANTRY (CAPTAIN HOOD).

One of the live wire companies of the Guard is the reorganized Company M, of the Third Infantry, commanded by Captain Warren S. Hood, ably assisted by Lieutenants Gress and Kent. This infantry unit is largely made up of graduates of the John Wanamaker Commercial Institute. The above illustration shows the company in the field on inspection.

THE IMPORTANCE OF MAKING ALL THE UNITS EFFICIENT.

Henry H. Doan, Major, Medical Corps, N. G. P.

It is to be hoped that the ambition of every company, battery and troop is to be the best company, battery or troop in the Division; for as a result of such laudable rivalry, satisfactory ratings are awarded by the inspecting officers, and these marks contribute materially to the reputation of the command.

A slang phrase expresses quite aptly the one thing that really counts in the military business—"delivering the goods." The best results may be attained by looking to the efficiency of the unit, down to the squad; and by giving careful consideration to details. Ben Franklin said, "Take care of the pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves."

An aggregation of efficient squads will make an efficient company, and efficient companies will make an efficient regiment, and working along these lines, brigades, divisions and armies that can be depended upon.

Few appreciate the inestimable value of team work. It is not an uncommon event for a foot ball team to defeat a heavier eleven by clever team work; then, too, success in this game does not always depend upon the mighty efforts of a Hercules or two, but upon the team work of all the eleven men. And so it is in a military organization; its success depends upon the efforts of every member on the muster roll. One poor or indifferent unit may handicap the progress of an otherwise promising outfit.

An officer may ask: How shall I go about securing the very best results? My answer would be: get after the smallest units in the command. No one will oppose me when I state that the very best and most efficient organization is composed of an aggregation of the very best and most efficient units.

The company officers must impress upon the squad leaders that much of the responsibility rests upon the shoulders of the non-commissioned officers, and through the squad leaders the other enlisted men should have it made perfectly clear to them that to achieve success, every man must put forth his very best efforts, and perform his duties to the best of his ability.

If it is the ambition of a private to belong to the best company, he should endeavor to make himself the best private in the regiment; and if a company commander wishes to have his regiment lead the division, he should try to make his company the banner company of the State; and if all the company officers of a particular regiment are possessed with the same ambitious desire, and work with that goal in view, that command WILL most likely lead the State when the inspector publishes his annual report.

So, gentlemen, if you will but endeavor to bring the particular unit with which you may be associated, up to its maximum efficiency, you are almost sure of having the satisfaction of being a member of the company or regiment conspicuous for its enviable rating.

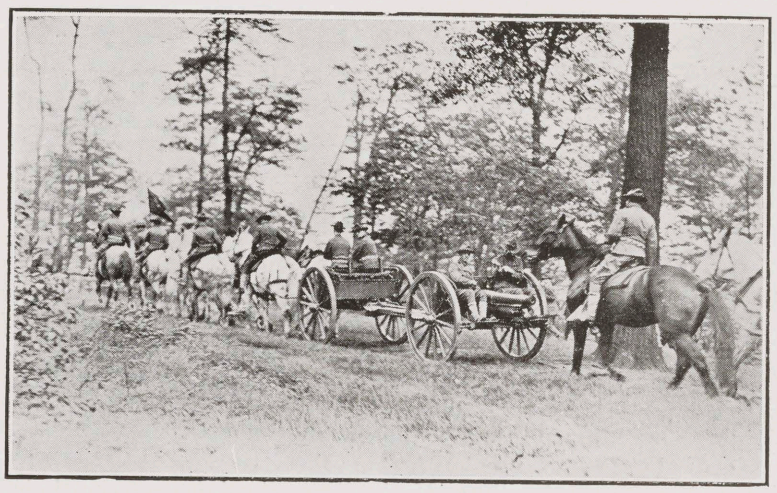
With the aid of the Eighteenth Regiment, a thrilling drama of love and war for the motion picture men was recently enacted at Pittsburgh. The story presented tells of the love affairs of two United States Army officers and a young Southern girl. Major R. G. Woodside was in command of the battalion of the Eighteenth Regiment. The infantry, the major's staff, the drum corps, hospital corps and mounted officers, with two guns and ammunition wagons from Battery B, were used in the battle scene.



HAMPTON BATTERY B, SCHENLEY PARK.

BRIGADIER GENERAL R. DALE BENSON.

General R. Dale Benson was born in Philadelphia, December 1, 1841, and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in the Class of 1860, before he was nineteen years of age. He soon afterwards became a clerk in a wholesale grocery house in this city, but stirred by the first call of President Lincoln for troops, he entered the military service of the United States as a Pennsylvania volunteer, enlisting April 24, 1861, for three months. He entered the service as a private in the Commonwealth Artillery Company, U. S. V., April 24, 1861; in 1862 as Second Lieutenant, Company B, 114th Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, promoted from Second Lieutenant to First Lieutenant January 1st, 1863; breveted Captain and Major March 13, 1865, and was mustered out July, 1865, as brevet Major U. S. Volunteers. Having in the meantime participated with distinction in the famous campaigns of the Army of the Potomac and the James. He also served in the National Guard of Pennsylvania for nine years, from 1868 to 1877 as Adjutant, First Regiment Infantry, January 22, 1868, to Major, February 29, 1868; to Lieutenant Colonel, December 9, 1868; resigned February 17, 1873. He re-entered the State service and was commissioned Colonel of the same regiment June 4, 1873, resigned October 10, 1877. During which time he held with marked credit the position of Colonel of the First Regiment.

His personal bravery and signal abilities as a commanding officer are well remembered in connection with the perilous position occupied by his regiment in the memorable round-house emergency in the Pittsburgh riots of 1877.

General Benson is Vice-Commander of the First Regiment Veteran Corps and is deeply interested in all that pertains to the advancement of the National Guard of Pennsylvania.

In 1866 he re-entered mercantile life, engaging in the importation and jobbing of teas and becoming a member of a firm doing business both in this city and New York; his connection in this direction continued until 1881. In the meantime he had become a director of the Insurance Company of the State of Pennsylvania, and served in that body for a considerable period. In February, 1881, he was elected vice-president of the Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Company, and in August of the same year assumed the active duties of the position, since which time he has devoted his skill and energies with much success to the interests and growth of that corporation, and became its president in August, 1890, which position he still occupies. He was also a director of the Franklin Fire Insurance Company, holding the position for some time and giving to it much interest and attention.

General Benson is prominently identified with a number of important interests in the city of Philadelphia, being a director of the Philadelphia National Bank, the Real Estate Trust Company, the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington R. R. Company, the United Railroads of New Jersey and Canal Company, the Catawissa Railroad Company, the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company. He is also manager of the Western Saving Fund Society, president of the Merchants' Fund of Philadelphia. Besides these distinctions he has always been actively identified with the Union League, having been a member since 1866, and several leading clubs of the city, and is otherwise prominent in social life.

Appointed Brigadier General under Act of Assembly, May 25, 1911.

ONE REASON THE WELL TRAINED FIGHTING FORCES OF TURKEY HAVE MET WITH DISASTER.

Henry H. Doan, Major, Medical Corps, N. G. P.

Those who have not been convinced of the utilitarian and strategic value of an efficient, properly organized and up-to-date Medical Department, need only read the accounts of the war in Turkey. Should the horrors of those cholera ridden camps fail to convince them— What's the use?

Cholera is a preventable disease. We know all about cholera; more than we do about measles. We have isolated the germ of cholera, the "comma bacillus" of Koch. We know how this germ is transmitted from one human being to another, and we know how this can readily be prevented. There is little more to be learned about cholera; all that is necessary is to institute the proper prophylactic measures, see that they are observed, and there will be no cholera.

As in typhoid fever, this disease is contracted by taking into the mouth live germs from some other case of cholera. Possessed with this knowledge, and armed with the authority to enforce orders, all there is to do to prevent the spread of this dread malady is to boil the water, cook the rations, insist that all food be handled with absolutely clean hands, and see that all excreta is disposed of in a sanitary manner. Explain to the men why these precautions are taken; for it is my experience that if a soldier is made familiar with the reasons for doing certain things, and can thus act intelligently, he is more apt to follow instructions than should he be ordered arbitrarily to do so.

Sick, wounded and dead men are of no use to an army; indeed, they are quite the reverse. An army's future efficiency can much better be depended upon should the losses sustained be caused by casualties, than a disease like cholera. Bullets are to be feared mostly during the daytime, and perhaps only for a few hours on a few days. When the firing ceases the danger ceases; but cholera will attack all of the camp all of the time. With the modern bullet, the percentage of fatal wounds is surprisingly low; but with cholera, a death rate of 50 per cent. is not considered high.

The influence of a disease like cholera upon the morale of the troops is amazing. Brave men, who will without hesitation take the most reckless chances on the field of battle, will become the most arrant cowards upon the mention of that dread word cholera.

In war, the utilitarian view of our service must take precedence over the sentimental. Armies are organized and maintained for the purpose of fighting battles and defeating an enemy, and the entire strength and resources of the medical department must be drawn upon to assist in bringing about a successful issue; it requires but little argument to show that a properly organized and trained medical department can contribute much thereto by its efforts in maintaining the effective strength of an army.

One of the many functions of the medical department, is the prevention of disease among the troops. In paragraph 4 of Article X of the Field Service Regulations, we find that the duties of the medical department in the field are, first, "The initiation of sanitary measures to insure the health of the troops," and second, "The management of epidemics among the inhabitants of occupied territory." As I said in my article on Typhoid Fever, published by the "Press" some weeks ago, "Only fit men can fight," and the army with the largest number of fit men on the firing line—all other things being equal—is surely going to win the battle.

The well soldier will march further, fight better, work harder, and remain contented and cheerful. It is an infinitely easier task to keep him well, than to take care of him after he is sick. When you stop to think that on the eve of battle, one fit fighting man would be worth more than an army corps of bed patients, the force of my argument may be apparent.

The Turks are excellent soldiers and good fighting men. They were well trained by competent German officers—but; I am hazarding no guess, when I state absolutely and positively that the medical department of the Turkish army was slighted, for CHOLERA IS THERE, and the constant presence of disease among the Ottoman troops has contributed most materially towards the unparalleled series of victories of the Allied forces.

All manner and kind of opinions have been written on the Turkish-Bulgarian War, but no editorials which have come to our attention have noted that the conflict has contributed fresh argument for the pay-for-drill bill for the militia. The Journal believes that the country should take heed from the downfal of the Turk and demand of Congress at its next session that legislation be enacted to increase the efficiency of the militia.

The war in the East was perhaps in a sense a struggle between the Oriental and the Occidental civilization. No doubt religion was a great issue in the conflict, but to men who study military affairs, this one fact stands out pre-eminent. The Bulgars and their allies were prepared, the Turks were not. The Bulgars had a real army, which early took the field, and in short order routed their enemies.

Surely, the United States must study well the experience of Turkey. The fact that we are to-day paying little or no attention towards preparation for war reflects no credit upon us as a great nation. General Wood and other prominent officers have pointed out the weaknesses of the militia. It is a well-known condition that company captains are meeting with the greatest difficulty to-day in obtaining recruits and likewise in securing attendance at drills. The Journal has long since declared that it was but just to recompense the men for the sacrifice of their time. Throughout the country, reports are current that the militia is struggling to keep up its numbers. The nation is opposed to a great standing army, and the only other alternative is the maintenance of an efficient militia. To do this latter, Congress must act. And at the present time there is but one thing to do. Pass the Pay-for-Drill bill.

The First City Troop is known from Maine to California, and the Pennsylvania National Guard is proud to possess among its units this historic troop of cavalry. The First Troop has had a continuous career for almost a century and a half and has participated in every campaign of the nation. Age has in no way withered its zeal nor its efficiency, and the Troop to-day maintains both the traditions of an honored past with the standards of the present requirements. The Troop is honoring a worthy inheritance by living up to the highest ideals of service. All honor to this splendid unit.

"Rowley's Ninth Infantry Band" since becoming a unit of the Ninth Infantry, on May 17, 1910, which was incidentally the date of Thompson H. Rowley's enlistment in the National Guard of Pennsylvania and his appointment as Chief Musician, has stood for progress, not only in the quality of its music, but of everything which goes to make up a well-organized and equipped military band.

The first encampment which Rowley's Ninth Infantry Band attended was held at Mt. Gretna in July, 1909. Since that time it was with the Ninth Infantry at the Federal maneuvers at Gettysburg, 1910, at Selinsgrove, Pa., during the encampment of the Third Brigade, in 1911, and at Gettysbur gduring the last encampment.

All who attended the encampment at Gettysburg in July, 1912, will recall the arrival of Governor and Commander-in-Chief John K. Tener. It was Rowley's Ninth Infantry Band which was called upon to greet the Governor with the strains of "Hail to the Chief" and to escort him to his headquarters in the tented city. Of course a band, and especially a military band, like every other organization, is what its leader makes it. In commenting upon the band's efficiency it might be well to glance at the record of its chief musician, Thompson H. Rowley, who is also the solo, or first cornet of Oppenheim's Orchestra of Wilkes-Barre, having been with them for fourteen years.

Before locating in Wilkes-Barre, he filled the first chair of Baker's Band and Orchestra of Binghamton, N. Y., for seven years. His ability there proved to be the foundation of his present characteristic—efficiency. He is a firm believer in team work; that without the co-operation of every member of the organization success cannot be had. For this reason a large portion of his work has been devoted to securing co-operation.

Visitors to Scranton should keep well in mind the Hotel Casey, which is one of the leading hostelries of the State. This hotel is splendidly located in the very heart of the busy city and is quartered in a handsome, large, and thoroughly modern building. The cuisine is famous, a special feature being that all of the vegetables and produce are obtained from the hotel farm. The Casey management has a well deserved high reputation for courtesy.

Colonel Robert B. Beath has compiled for the benefit of the public interesting data regarding enlistments in the Union Army during the Civil War. The Journal takes deep pleasure in publishing the statistics, as follows:

To say that 1,151,438 boys and young men enlisted at 18 years of age and under and that 2,159,789 were 21 years old or under, should be sufficient.

The total number enlisted in the Union Army, Navy and Marine Corps, 1861-1865, was 2,778,304.

Of these there were credited to the army 2,672,341.
And to the Navy and Marine Corps, 105,963.
Number of enlistments at 10 years and under, 25.
Number of enlistments at 11 years and under, 38.
Number of enlistments at 12 years and under, 225.
Number of enlistments at 13 years and under, 300.
Number of enlistments at 14 years and under, 1,525.
Number of enlistments at 15 years and under, 104,987.
Number of enlistments at 16 years and under, 231,051.
Number of enlistments at 17 years and under, 844,891.
Number of enlistments at 18 years and under, 1,151,438.
Number of enlistments at 21 years and under, 2,159,789.
Number of enlistments at 22 years and older, 618,511.
Number of enlistments at 25 years and older, 46,626.
Number of enlistments at 44 years and older, 16,071.

Allowing for duplicate enlistments, members of the three months, six months, nine months and one year regiments re-enlisting for further terms, the total number of individuals in the army under the best estimates was about 2,213,365.

The boys reported above under the age of 14 were mainly drummer boys, but many of them followed closely the line of battle, doing their duty as bravely as their older comrades, and many took their places in the ranks and received promotion.

The number of deaths in the army from all causes before the war closed was 359,528. Thousands more died after discharge from disabilities incurred.

NOTES

The Gold and Silver Medal Revolver Shoot was held on the indoor range of Battery B on Thanksgiving morning. The Benton Gold Medal was won by Sergeant James R. Clark by a score of 83. Sergeant Samuel D. Hollis was second with a score of 79. This contest was open to those who had qualified as experts and sharpshooters during the regular practice season. The Battery Association Silver Medal was won by Private Frank Keller by a score of 72. Private Edwin H. McCawley was second with a score of 71. All marksmen were eligible to shoot in this contest.

First Lieutenant and Assistant Surgeon S. C. Heller, of the Fourth Infantry, is arranging a school in first aid for Companies C and K of the Fourth, alternating the sessions in Columbia and Lancaster.

A number of the younger company officers are strongly advocating the election of a company commander as Vice-President of the National Guard Association of Pennsylvania at its next session. The names of Captain H. Melvin Allen, of the Fourth Infantry, Captain Samuel B. Edwards, of the Eighth, and Captain Frederic P. Schoonmaker, of the Sixteenth, are among those prominently mentioned in connection with this movement. Advocates of the plan says that it has been pointed out on several occasions that the company officers should have direct representation in the administrative affairs of the association as the practical work of the Guard largely depends upon the company commanders.

The officers of the Sixteenth Regiment reported at Bradford on Tuesday, November 26, at 9.30 o'clock in the morning, for the purpose of instruction. The classes were continued until 5.30 o'clock in the afternoon. The subjects for instruction and discussion were those specified in General Orders No. 21, headquarters of the regiment for the first six weeks together with the methods of conducting the course for non-commissioned officers. Major Farnsworth, U. S. A., Inspector-Instructor, was present at the sessions, and it is reported that the results were very gratifying to him. Colonel Rickards and the officers of the Sixteenth were the guests of Colonel Burns and Captain Schoonmaker and the local Armory Board. The occasion was made doubly interesting, owing to the official dedication of the State Armory, which was made a memorable occasion for Company C. Governor Tener, members of the State Armory Board and many distinguished officials were present at the dedicatory ceremonies and reception tendered to the Governor. The occasion concluded with a ball which was attended by the prominent families of the city and county. The Sixteenth Regiment is the most scattered regiment in the State, its area covering some two hundred and seventy miles.

One of the pleasant surprises at the dedication of the Bradford Armory on Tuesday, November 26th, was the presentation of a fine saddle horse, fully equipped, to Colonel George C. Rickards by the officers of the Sixteenth Infantry. This was a mark of appreciation and esteem in which the officers of this time-honored command hold Colonel Rickards. Colonel Rickards, in a few chosen and feeling remarks, thanked the officers for their kind remembrance.

Lieutenant Colonel A. Drum Porter, formerly Aide-de-Camp on the First Brigade Staff and widely known as a former officer of the National Guard of Pennsylvania, was recently elected to the Lieutenant Colonelcy of the Twelfth New York Infantry.

Lieutenant Colonel William Sharpe, Adjutant General of the Division, of New York, after an active service of twenty-five years, has requested to be placed on the retired list with the increased rank of Colonel, as provided for by the Act of Assembly, May 25, 1911. The retirement of Colonel Sharpe is a distinct loss to the division.

It is reported that Captain M. W. Murphy, of the Thirteenth, may shortly retire owing to pressure of business. Captain Murphy has met with signal success as a company commander and his withdrawal from active service would be very much regretted.

The meeting of the National Guard Association of the State of Pennsylvania will, in all probability, take place during the second week in January. A tentative program has been arranged for the entertainment of the delegates, and some of the local officers of the Thirteenth significantly state that they will have a few surprises to make the occasion interesting.

A banquet will be tendered the delegates at the Board of Trade and Colonel Stilwell will assemble the Thirteenth for parade and review. This feature will probably be followed by dancing. The famous Thirteenth Regiment Band will provide an entertaining music program.

Editor Our State Army and Navy Journal.

Dear Sir:—I note in a recent publication that the Duquesne Greys held a reunion of its old members and incidentally exhibited a number of uniforms worn by the officers and former members during every period from the Mexican War to the present time, and also a display of firearms with a brass saluting cannon which was won by the Greys at the Haymarket Square Fair, in Allegheny, in 1862. Was this a reunion of the Eighteenth Regiment? I served in this command under Colonel Chambers McKibbin and I have a number of relics which I would gladly loan for similar occasions. The absence of the National Guard title is somewhat mystifying to me and I would appreciate hearing from you.

Former Corporal, Phillipsburg, N. J.

Former Corporal Eighteenth Infantry.

We are not advised of any exhibition such as you mention, from the headquarters of the Eighteenth Infantry Duquesne Greys, and I respectfully suggest that you communicate with Lieutenant Colonel Edward L. Kearns, 611 Frick Building, Pittsburgh, Pa., who is unusually well informed on the history of the famous command.

The time-honored First City Troop had Major General Leonard Wood, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, and Colonel Scott, his aide, as guests of honor at the 137th anniversary of the famous organization on November 18. The actual date fell on the day previous, which was Sunday, but the celebration was arranged for the week day. During the afternoon the customary parade of the First through the central section of the city took place, and was followed by dinner at the armory, on Twenty-third street, near Chestnut. About a hundred members, garbed in the uniforms designed during the Revolutionary War, participated in the parade.

Advocates of improved highways are watching with much interest the construction of one of the first country roads of concrete ever built in the State of New Jersey, on Morris turnpike, one mile west of New Village and about eight miles east of Phillipsburg. While concrete is a comparatively new material in country road construction, it has been used for a number of years in other parts of the United States. The contractors for the work are Salmon Brothers, Netcong, New Jersey, and the road is being built by the State, under the supervision of J. R. Thatcher, Director of the Board of Freeholders, Warren County, New Jersey.

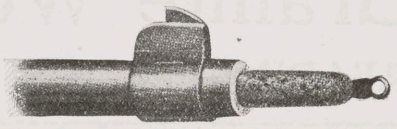
Your Rifles Kept Perfectly Clean from One Encampment to Another.



The Ideal Anti-Rust Rope

Has solved the problem, of keeping the rifles in perfect condition at all times. They are saturated with a rust preventive and when placed in the rifle they exclude all air and moisture. Being larger than the bore the oil is pressed against the entire inside of the barrel. You have undoubtedly had the experience of taking a rifle from the arm rack and finding rust spots in the barrel. Although the rifle had been well cleaned and oiled when put away. The trouble comes from this fact. Oil will very often, on smooth and highly polished metal, slide off, on small patches of the metal, in little globules, leaving the metal perfectly bare on these patches. Then moisture gets in its work and sets its indelible seal in the glistening steel, causing damage and a constant eyesore and increased worry to every company commander. To keep your rifles spotless they will require daily inspection under the old way of treating them. Air and moisture are rust breeders, are everywhere and at all times.

The Ideal Anti-Rust Ropes

Have solved the problem. These ropes will absolutely prevent rust where they are used and all worry and trouble are eliminated.

FREE SAMPLE—We will send to any Captain or Quartermaster, Four Ideal Anti-Rust Ropes, a solid brass Ramrod, bottle of Gun Oil, Ex. prepaid, upon receipt of 50 cents in stamps, which amount may be deducted from first order
